THE BURNING OF COLUMBIA. A DARK CHAPTER OF UNWRITTEN

The Report of the Committee of Citizen Appointed to Collect Testimony-Scenes in the Stricken City-Incidents of the Night of Terror Caused by the Great

By J. P. Carroll, Chairman of the Committee of Citizens.

The Committee who were charged with the duty of collecting the evidence in re-lation to the destruction of Columbia by fire on the 17th of February, 1865, submit the following report: By the terms of the resolution appointing them the com-mittee do not feel authorized to deduce any conclusion or pronounce any judgment, however warranted by the proofs, as to the person responsible for the crime. Their task will be accomplished by presenting the evidence that has been obtained, with an abstract of the fact established by it. More than either descriptions of the fact established by it. tained, with an abstract of the fact estab-lished by it. More than sixty depositions and statements in writing, from as many individuals, have been placed in the hands of the committee. The array of witnesses is impressive, not merely be-cause of their number, but for the high tone and elevated character of some of them, the unpretending and sterl-ing probity of others, and the gen-eral intelligence and worth of all. The plain and unvarnished narrative sub-joined is taken from the testimony refer-red to solely and exclusively, except so red to solely and exclusively, except so much as refers to certain declarations of red to solely and exclusively, except so much as refers to certain declarations of Gen. Sherman himself, widely circulated through the public press, and to the ravages of his army in this State after their departure from Columbia; matters of such notoriety as, in the judgment of the committee, to dispense with the necessity of formal proof. The frees of Gen. Sherman's command while in Georgia seem to have anticipated that their next march would be through South Carolina. Their temper and feeling toward our people, a witness, Mrs. L. Catherine Joyner, thus describes: "The soldiers were universal in their threats. They seemed to gloat over the distress that would result from their march through the State. I conversed with numbers of all grades belonging to the Fourteenth and Twentieth corps. Such expressions as the following were of hourly occurrence: 'Carolina may well fear us; she brought this war on, and shall pay the penalty. You think Georgia has suffered; just wait until we get into Carolina; every man, woman and child may dread us there.'" Of Gen. Sherman himself the same witness informs us that, addressing himself to a lady of his acquaintance, he said to her: "Go off the line of railroad, for I will not answer for the consequences where the army passes."

for the consequences where the army

the progress of the invading army from Columbia through this State to its northern frontier, and the Towns of Winnsboro, Camden, and Cheraw suffered from like visitation by fire. If a single town or village or hamlet within their line of march escaped alterether the track of willage or hamlet within their line of march escaped altogether the torch of the invaders the committee have not been informed of the exception. The line of Gen. Sherman's march from his entering the territory of the State up to Columbia, and from Columbia, to the North Carolina border, was one continuous track of fire. The devastation and ruin thus inflicted were but the execution of the policy and plan of Gen. Sherman of the policy and plan of Gen. Sherman for the policy and plan of Gen. Sherman for the subjugation of the Confederate States. Extracts from his address, at Salem, Ill., have appeared in the public prints, and thus he announces and vindicates the policy and plan referred to: "We were strung out from Mashville clear down to Atlanta. Had I then gone on attinging out one forces what danger on stringing out our forces what danger would there not have been for their attacking the little head of the column and crushing it? Therefore, I resolved in a moment to stop the game of guarding their cities, and to destroy their cities. We were determined to produce results, and now what were those results? To make every man and woman and child in the South feel that if they dared to rebel against the flag of their country they must die or submit." The plan of subjugation adopted by Gen. Sherman was fully comprehended and approved of by his army. His officers and men universally justified their acts by declaring that it was "the way to put down the rebellion by burning and destroying everything." Before the surrender of our town the soldiers of Gen. Sherman, officers and privates, declared that it was to be destroyed. "It was," deposes a witness of the pass of the pas on stringing out our forces what danger would there not have been for their atcers and privates, declared that it was to be destroyed. "It was," deposes a wit-ness (Mrs. Rosa J. Meetze,) "the common talk among them (at the village of Lex-ington) that Columbia was to be burned by Gen. Sherman." At the same place, on the 16th of February, 1865, as deposed by another witness, Mrs. Frances T. Caughman, the general officer in com-mand of his cavalry forces, Gen. Kilpat-rick, said in reference to Columbia: mand of his cavalry forces, Gen. Kilpatrick, said in reference to Columbia: "Sherman will lay it in ashes for them." "It was the general impression among all the prisoners we captured," says a Confederate officer, Col. J. P. Austin, of the Ninth Kentucky Cavalry, "that Columbia was to be destroyed."

SHELLING SOUTH CAROLINA'S CAPITAL On the morning of the same day (February 16, 1865) some of the forces of Gen. Sherman appeared on the western side of the Congaree River, and without a demand of surrender, or any previous notice of their purpose, began to shell the town, then filled with women, children and aged persons, and continued to do so, at intervals, throughout the day. The Confederate forces were withdrawn and the town restored to the control of the maintained and the town restored to the control of The Confederate forces were witherawn and the town restored to the control of the municipal anthorities on the moraling of the I7th of February. Accompanied by three of the addermen, the mayor, between 8 and 9 o'clock a. m., proceeded in the direction of Broad River for the purpose of surrendering the city to Gen. Sherman and the control of the mayor, between 8 and 9 o'clock a. m., proceeded in the direction of Broad River for the purpose of surrendering the city to Gen. Sherman of the control of mayor and aldermen to the first general officer of the hostile army whom they met, and that officer promised protection to the town and its inhabitants until communication could be had with Gen. Sherman and the terms of surrender arranged. By 11 o'clock a my the town ranged. By 11 o'clock a. m. the town was in possession of the Federal forces, the first detachment entering being the command o' the officer who had received command of the officer who had received the surrender. They had scarcely marched into the town, however, before they began to break into the stores of the merchants, appropriating the contents or throwing them into the streets and destroying them. As other bodies of troops came in the pillage grew more general, and soon the sack of the town was universal. Guards were in general general, and soon the sack of the town was universal. Guards were in general sent to those of the citizens who applied for them, but in numerous instances they proved to be unable or unwilling to perform the duty assigned them. Scarcely a single household or family escaped altogether from teing plundered. The streets of the town were densely filled with thousands of Federal soldiers, drinking, shouting, carousing and robbing the defenceless inhabitants without reprimand or check from their officers, and this state of things continued until night. In some instances guards were refused. Papers and property of great value were in the vaults of the city banks, while the apartments above and in the rear were occupied by women and children, with their food and clothing. For a guard to protect them application was made by one of our worthiest and most respectable citizens, Edwin J. Scott, Esq., first to the general officer who had received the surrender of the town, Col. Stone, and then to the provost marshal, Major Jenkins. The response made to received the surrender of the town, Col. Stone, and then to the provost marshal, Major Jenkins. The response made to the applicant by the former officer, though standing idly in the crowd, was that he "had no time to attend to him," and the answer of the latter was, "I cannot undertake to protect private property." Between 2 and 3 o'clock p. m. Gen. Sherman in ; son rode into Columbia, informed the hayor that his letter had been received and promised protection to the town. Extraordinary license was allowed to the soldiers by Gen. Sherman.

SHERMAN'S ASSURANCE OF SAFEGUARD. On the afternoon of the 17th of Feb-On the afternoon of the 17th of February, and shortly after his arrival in Columbia, the mayor of the town, at the reqest of Gen. Sherman, accompanied him on a visit to a lady of his acquaintance. While proceeding to her residence Gen. Sherman began to express his opinion very freely upon the subject of our institution of slavery. In the midst of his remarks he was interrupted by the sudden and near report of a musby the sudden and near report of a mus-ket; immediately before them in the dist; immediately before them in the direction they were going, they observed a group of Federal soldiers seeming to be excited, and upon approaching they saw a negro lying dead directly in their path, being shot though the heart. "Gen. Sterman," the mayor Dr. T. J. Goodwyn narrates, "asked of the soldiers 'how came the negro shot," and was answered that he had been guilty of great insolence to them, and that thereupon Gen. Sherman remarked: "Stop this boys, this is all wrong; take away the body and bury it." "Gen. Sherman," continues the mayor, "then steeped over the body of the negro and observed to this deponent that 'in quiet times such a thing ought to be noticed, but in times like this it cannot be done." General Sherman, resumed his conversation in relation to slavery, and no arrest was ordered or any censure or reprimand uttered by him executed. A HARVEST OF DESOLATION.

The threats uttered in Georgia were sternly executed by the troops of Gen. Sherman upon their entrance into this State. For eighty miles along the route of his army, through the most highly improved and cultivated region of the State, according to the testimony of intelligent and respectable witnesses the habitations of but two white persons remained. As he advanced, the villages of Hardeeville, Grahamville, Gillisonville, McPhersonville, Barnwell, Blackville, Midway, Orangeburg and Lexington were successfully devoted to the flames; indignities and outrages were perpetrated upon the persons of the inhabitants; the implements of sgriculture were broken; dwellings, barns, mills and ginhouses were consumed; proviaions of every description appropriated or destroyed; horses and mules carried away, and sheep, cattle and hogs were either taken for actual use or shot down and left behind. The like devastation marked the progress of the invading army from Columbia through this State to its northern frontier, and the Towns of Winnsboro, Camden, and Cheraw suffered from like visitation by fire. If a single town or village or hamlet within their line of march escaped altogether the torch of the invadure the torch of the march escaped altogether the torch of the section and proproaching the sward angerolying dead directly in their path, being shot though the heart. "Gen. Sherman," the mayor che heart. "Geodwyn narrates, "asked of the soldiers sward that he had been guilty of great insolence to them, and that there upon Gen. Sherman," the mayor chest, was answered that he had been guilty of the negro shot, "and was answered that he had been guilty of the march engro, A. Toomer Porter, testifies that the same afternoon, between 6 and 7 o'clock, Gen. Sherman said to him: "You must know a great manly ladies. Go around and tell them to go to bed quietly; they will not be disturbed any more than if my army was one bundred miles off." He seemed obvious of the fact that we had been pillaged and insulted the whole day. In one hour's time the city ween. That Columbia was burned by the sol-day. In one hours time the city was in flames. Meanwhile the soldiers had burned that afternoon many houses in the environs of the town, including the the environs of the town, including the residence of Gen. Hampton and that of his sisters, formerly the residence of their father, and once the seat of genial and princely hospitality. Throughout the day, after they had marched into the town, the soldiers of Gen. Sherman gave distinct and frequent notice to the citizens of their impanding calculations. distinct and frequent notice to the citizens of their impending calamity, usually in the form of fierce and direct threats, but occasionally, as if in kindly forewarning. A lady of rare worth and intelligence, and of high social position, Mrs. L. S. McCord, relates the following incident: "One of my maids brought me a paper, left, she told me, by a Yankoo soldier; it was an ill-spelled but kindly warning of the horrors to come, written upon a torn sheet of my dead written upon a torn sheet of my dead son's note-book, which, with private pa pers of every kind, now strewed my yard; it was signed by a lieutenant, bu of what company or regiment I did not take note. The writer said he had rela-tives and friends at the South, and that he felt for us; that his heart bled to think of what was threatening. 'Ladies,' he wrote, 'I pity you; leave this town; go anywhere to be safer than here.' This was written in the morning; the fires were in the evening and night."

WAS IT A PRECONCERTED SIGNAL? One of our citizens of great intelligence one of our citizens or great intelligence, and respectability, Wm. H. Orchard, was visited about 7 p. m. by a squad of some six or seven soldiers, to whose depradations he submitted with a composure which seemed to impress their leader. Of his conversation with this person the gratianus, referred to testifies as Of his conversation with this person the gentleman referred to testifies as follows: "On leaving the yard he called to me and said he wished to speak to me alone. He then said to me, in an undertone: 'You seem to be a clever sort of a man, and have a large family, so I will give you some advice; if you have anything you wish to save, take care of it at once, for before morning this dand town will be in selver. ing this d—d town will be in ashes—every house in it.' My only reply was, can that be true. He said 'yea, and if you do not believe me you will be the sufferer; and if you watch you will see three rockets go up soon, and if you do not take advice you will see h—il."
Within an hour afterward three rockets

The wind was high and blew from the west. The fire spread and advanced with fearful rapidity and soon enveloped the very heart of the town. The pillage, which had begun upon the entrance of the hostile forces, continued without cessation or abstement, and now the town was delivered over to the accumulated horrors of sack and conflagration. The inhabitants were subjected to personal indignities and outrages. A witness. Capt. W. B. Standley, testified that several times during the night he "saw the soldiers of Gen. Sherman take from females bundles of clothing and provisions, open them, appropriate what they wanted, and throw the remainder into the flames." Men were violently seized and threatened with the halter or the pistol to compel them to disclose where their gold or silver was concealed. The reverend and beloved pastor of one of our churches, Rev. P. J. Shand, states that "in the midst and during the progress of the appalling calamity, above all other noises might be heard the demoniac and gladsome shouts of the soldiery." Driven from his home by the flames, with the aid of a servant he was bearing off a trunk containing the communion plate of his church (his wife walking by his side,) when he was surrounded by five of the soldiers, who requested him to put down the trunk and inform them of its contents, which was done. The sequel he thus harrates: "They then demanded the key, but I not having it, they proceeded in efforts to break the lock. While four of them were thus engaged the fifth seized me with his left hand by the collar and presenting a pistoi to my breast with his right, he demanded of me my watch. I had it not about me, but he searched my pocket, thoroughly, and then joined his comrades who, finding it impracticable to force upon the lock, took up the trunk and carried it away. These men (he added) were all perfectly sober." The wind was high and blew from the

By 3 o'clock on the morning of the 18th of February, 1865, more than two-thirds of the town lay in ashes, composing the most highly improved and the entire business portion of it. Thousands of the inhabitants, including women delicately reared, young children, the aged and the sick, passed that winter night in the open air, without shelter from the bitter and piercing blasts. About the hour mentioned (2 o'clock a.m.,) another highly esteemed clergyman, Rev. A. Toomer Porter, personally known to Gen. Sherman, was at the corner of a street conversing with one of his officers on horseback, when Gen. Sherman, in citizen's attire, walked up and accosted him. The interview is thus described: "In the bright light of the burning city Gen. Sherman recognized me and remarked, "This is a horrible sight." Yes, I replied, 'when you reflect that women and children are the victimes.' He said: 'Your Governor is responsible for this.' 'How a?' I replied, 'when you respect here.' WO-THIRDS OF THE TOWN IN ASHES.

THE INCENDIARIES SORER.

jority of the incendiaries were sober, that for hours they were seen with combustibles firing house after house, without any affectation of concealment, and without the slightest check from their officers, is established by proof full to repletion and wearisome from its very superfluity. After the destruction of the town his officers and man openly approved of its burning and exulted in it. "I saw," deposes the mayor, "very few drunken soldiers that night; many who appeared to sympathize with our people told me that the fate and doom of Columbia had been common talk around their camp fires common talk around their camp fires ever since they left Savannah." It was said by numbers of the coldiers that the order had been given to burn down the order had been given to burn down the city. There is strong evidence that such an order was actually issued in relation to the house of Gen. John S. Preston. The Ursuline Convent was destroyed by the fire and the proof referred to comes from a revered and honored member of that holy sisterhood (the Mother Superior) and it is subjoined in her own words; "Our Convent was consumed in the con-Our Convent was consumed in the gen-eral conflagration of Columbia, ourselves and pupils were forced to fly, leaving pro-visione clothing and almost everything. We spent the night in open air in the church-yard. On the following morning church-yard. On the following morning General Sherman made us a visit, expressed his regret at the burning of our Convent, discliamed the act, attributing it to the intoxication of his soldiers, and told me to choose any house in town for a convent and it should be ours. He deputed his Adjutant General, Colonel Ewing, to act in his stead. Colonel Ewing reminded us of General Sherman's offer to give us any house in Columbia we might choose for a convent. 'We we might choose for a convent. 'We have thought of it,' said we, 'and of asking for Gen. Preston's house, which is large.' 'That is where Gen. Logan holds his headquarters,' said he, 'and orders have already been given, I know, to burn it on to morrow morning: but if you say it on to-morrow morning; but if you say you will take it for a convent, I will speak to the General and the order will be countermanded. On the following morning, after many inqui-ies, we learned from the officer in charge (Gen. Perry, I think,) that his orders were to fire it unless the Sister was in the orders. think,) that his orders were to fire it un-less the Sisters were in actual possession of it, but if even 'a detachment of Sisters' were in it it should be spared on their account. Accordingly we took possession of it, although fires were already kindled near and the servants were carrying off the bedding and furniture in view of the house being consigned to the flames."

in-chief himself. The proof is beyond impeachment. It comes from the honored pastor of one of our city churches, Rev. P. J. Shand, to whom reference has already been made, and it is thus exposession of the committee of the possession of the committee of the com marked, This is a horrible sight. 'Yes' is replied, 'when you reflect that women and children are the victimes.' He said: 'Your Governor is responsible for this.' How so?' I replied, 'Who ever heard,' he eald, of an evacuated city being left as depot of liquor for an army to occupy. I found one hundred and twenly casks of whiskey in one cellar. Your Governor, being a lawyer or a judge, refused to have it destroyed, as it was private property, and now my men have got druck and have got beyond my control and this is 'we result. Perceiving the officer on homeback be said: 'Capt. Andrews, did I not order that this thing should be stroped?' 'Yes, General,' said the Captain, 'but the first division that came it regiment that occupied the town.' Then, sir,' said Gen. Shermar, 'go and bring in the second division; I hold you personally responsible for its immediate cessation.' The columbia was burned by the sole of the conception of the destroyers.' From that time until the second division; I hold you personally responsible for its immediate cessation and the time that Gen. Sherman gave in the second division; I hold you personally responsible for its immediate cessation and the second division; I hold you personally responsible for its immediate cessation that came had me good evening. I am sure it was burned by the soldiers, and during the test of the control of the con Carolina Railroad, which caught fire ac-cidentally from the explosion of some ammunition." This is the statement diers of Gen. Sherman, that the vast ma-jority of the incendiaries were sober, that ammunition." This is the statement of Gen. Beauregard himself. It is sustained by the testimony of the officer, high in rank, but higher still in character, who commanded the rear guard of the Confederate cavalry (Gen. M. C. Butier,) and is concurred in by other with a season covariaine.

> proof overwhelming. HOW THE COTTON WAS FIRED. The fire at the South Carolina Rail-witnesses, comprising officers, clergy-men and citizens—witnesses of such rep-ute and in such numbers as to render the

The fire at the South Carolina Railroid depot burned out without extending to any other buildings. Shortly after the first detachment of Gen. Sherman's troops had entered the town, and while men were seated or reclining on the cotton bales in Main street, and passing to and fro along them with lighted cigars and pipes, the row of cotton bales between Washington and Lady streets caught fire, the bales being packed, with the cotton protruding from them. The fiames extended swiftly over the cotton, and the fire companies with their enand the fire companies with their en-gines were called out, and by 1 o'clock p. m. the fire was effectually extinguished. While the fire companies were engaged about the cotton, an alarm was given of fire in the jail, and one of the given of fire in the jail, and one of the engines being sent there the flames were soon subdued, with slight injury only to one of the cells. About 5 o'clock in the ofternoon, as deposed to by a witness (Mrs. E. Squire,) the cotton bales in Sumter street, between Washington and Lady streets, were set on fire by Gen. Lady streets, were set on fire by Gen. Sherman's wagon traio, then passing along the cotton. But that fire was soon extinguished by the efforts of the witness referred to and her family. "I saw," says a witness (John McKenzie, Esq.) "fire-balls thrown out of the wagons against Hon. W. F. De Saussure's house, but without doing any damage." No other fires in the town occurred until after night, when the general conflagration began. As already stated, the wind began. As already stated, the wind blew from the west, but the fires after night broke out first on the west of Main and Sumter streets, and to windward of where the cotton bales were placed. "The cotton," it is testified and proved (Ed. J. Scott, Esq.,) "instead of burning the houses, was burned by them."

Before the drought of this year is forgotten let us take a brief review of the lessons it has taught us, so we may impress them on our memories and profit by them in the future.

1. Droughts are of incalculable advantage to the soil. They are to the earth what sleep is to the human body, "tired nature's sweet restorer." While the surface of the earth is parched with heat nature's sweet restorer." While the surface of the earth is parched with heat, by the mysterious force of capillary attraction, various fertilizing properties are continually rising from the subsoil, which but for the heat and drought in the surface would have remained below. The rising of the oil in the lamp witk, to sunnly the place of that which is con-The rising of the oil in the lamp wick, to supply the place of that which is consumed by the flame, is a familiar illustration of this process. If any farmer doubts the fact, let him notice the wonderful recuperation of the crops since the rains have fallen and let him account for its recognition. the rains have fallen and let him account for it upon any other hypothesis if he droughts are not dangerons. Up to this date they are in one or two respects like bomb shells; they make a great show and produce alarm and demoralization, but do very little execution. The splendid crops new growing all over our country prove this fact.

3. It will not do to stop work on account of dry weather. The editor of this paper very correctly observed, in his re-cent trip to Welford, that more corn was injured by not receiving the last work-ing, than by the dry weather—a fact which many farmers are now realizing to their sorrow.

4. Corn should be replanted, notwith-standing there may be no missing hills. It requires both a silk and tassel to make an ear of corn. These die very soon in dry weather, but when the rains come, the stalks if not completely exhausted, will throw out fresh silks, and these silks will make ears, provided there are any fresh tassles within reach to furnish the pollen. If there are no such tassles these efforts to make ears must prove abortive. A close inspection of any field of early corn to this time, will convince any one of these truths. We should have a stalk, then, about every ry fifteen feet square, planted two or three weeks after the main crop to fur-nish pollen in case a drought should kill all the old tassels.

5. The best provisions against drought are deep and thorough preparation, plenty of distance, liberal manuring, leveling the rows so as to save every drop of the partial showers that usually fall in time of a drought, and rapid and thor ough cultivation.

He who will remember the above facts

Revolutionary Incidents Connected with

Never was sobriquet more justly earned than this scoundrel assassin did the one attached to his name. He was known by it throughout the Revolutionary war, and died with it ringing in his ears. Born and brought up in the mountains of the Carolinas, he sought to lead the Indians, at the commencement of the Revolutionary war, on his old neighbors, friends and kindred. He strove to surpass his savage followers in all their horrible atrocities on the Whigs in the upper parts of Spartanburg and Greenville. After committing many outrages on the thinly settled citizens of this region of country, he came to the house of a Mr. Sillman, on Pacolette River, who had been living there for a number of years with his family. As soon as Bates and his Indians made their appearance, those of the family who were at home attempted to make their escape. They were immediately fired on by the Indians, and a son of Mr. Sillman's then a young man grown felled to the ground. He was shot through the body, and supposed for some time to be dead. But Bates discovered whilst plundering the house that he was alive, and he ordered one of his savage band to dispatch him. As the Indian approached him, young Sillman raised his hands and implored for mercy; but the savage was as insensible to mercy as he was ignorant of the language in which he was addressed. Instead of morcy, he first stamped his foot on the face of the white man and drew his butcher-knife and thrust it in the breastand side of his vic-man and drew his butcher-knife and thrust it in the breastand side of his victim. Sillman swooned away, and was again left for dead.

The Indians having loaded themselves with plunder, left the house.

The Indians having loaded themselves with plunder, left the house.

Not iong after the departure of Bates, Mrs. Sillman returned and found her son still breathing. Terrified and alarmed with the apprehension that the savages would again come back, and moved by that maternal love which is the strongest and most deep-rooted affection of the human heart, she took up in her arms the mangled body of her son, and made the best of her way with it to the swamp, not far distant. After washing the clotted blood from his head, breast and side, she went in search of assistance and protection. Some of the neighbors who had escaped the Indians and Bates, returned with her, and in her fright, confusion and alarm, she was unable at first to lead them to the place where she had concealed her son. After some search, however, the spot was discovered, and the young man found to be yet alive. He received all the attention that his family and neighbors could bestow, and, wonderful to say, recovered, and was living at the time of my visit to the battlefield of the Cowpens! In after life he wore his hair combed forward in such a manner as to conceal the scalp.

After his outrages in Spartanburg hair combed forward in such a manner as to conceal the scalp.

After his outrages in Spartanburg District, Bates divided his band of savages, and sent one portion of them to attack Mill's Station in North Carolina, whilst he led the others to Gowen's Fort in Greenville. Those who were dispatched to the former place, found the stetion wholly unprepared for an attack. The greater part of the garrison was dispersed in the neighborhood, and the fort fell an easy capture in the hands of the Indians. When they first made their appearance, Mrs. Mills was sitting with an infant in her arms suckling at the breast. She was shot at through the interstices of the logs of the fort, and the ball passed through the head of her babe and the breast at which it was sucking. A more shocking and dreadful sight cannot well be imagined.

ght cannot well be imagined The news of the capture and massacre of this station was carried that evening of this station was carried that evening to Captain John Earie, who immediately raised his company and went in pursuit of the Indians. They were tracked into the mountains, when the savages, finding themselves pursued, set the woods on fire and dispersed, which precluded the possibility of further pursuit.

Bates and his party proceeded to Gowen's Fort in Greenville, which, after a short but vigorous defence, was surrendered on condition that the unfortunate captives were to receive protection from their savage assailants. But no sooner was Bates in possession of the fort, than recreant to his word of honor and all the feelings of humanity, he ordered a general and indiscriminate massacre of all the prisoners. A most shocking butchery ensued of men, women and children, Neither age, sex nor even his own kindred were spared. But few made their Neither age, sex nor even his own kindred were spared. But few made their escape, and they in a horribly mangled condition Mrs. Thompson, the wife of Abner Thompson, Esq., made her escape after being scalped, and was still living in Greenville in 1830, venerated with her husband for their moral worth and Revolutionary services.

Amongst those who were killed was the Motley family, all but one son, who lived anothey family, all but one son, who lived to avenge in a signal manner the murder of his relations. Some of the garrison were not executed immediately, but reserved for a more cruel death. Amongst this number was young Motley. This young man, after being made to witness the murder of his father, mother, brothers the murder of his father, mother, brothers and sisters, was taken for the purpose of being burnt to the stake. All the horrid preparations for such a fate were in readiness. He was stripped of his coat, waistooat and shirt, and one Indian was unhitching his knee-buckles for the purpose of taking off his breeches, when he discovered Bates. Motley and Bates had been raised together, and an appeal was made to their old acquaintance and former friendship, but all in vain. Bates was insensible to all feelings of friendship and lumanity. In fact, he possessed all the vices of the savage without any of his virtues. He was cowardly and treacherous, as well as vindictive and revengeful in his purposes.

The reply of Bates to Motley's appeal

The reply of Bates to Motley's appeal for protection was, "Damn you, I have nothing to do with you!" At that instant Motley received a blow which felled him to the ground, and as he arose he determined to make an attempt to escaped, hoping that he would be shot or an end but to his life. an end put to his life at once. As he broke to run he was shot in the thigh, but notwithstanding this wound, he ef-fected his escape by means of the bushes and reeds growing on the creek close by. He ran several miles and got to the house of a tory whose wife protected nim. Major Gowen, who was also in the fort,

Major Gowen, who was also in the fort, was taken with some others to the mountains for the purpose of being killed at leisure, and in such manner as savage ferocity might suggest. The negroes were taken off by the Indians and Bates for the purpose of making property of them. An opportunity occurred during the night of despatching one of these negroes a trusty sevent of one of these negroes, a trusty servant of Maj. Gowen's, to Captain Parson's, who lived somewhere in that section of country. The Captain immediately collected a company of men and followed on until he overtook the Indians. They were completely surprised and round.

Revolution, and ment country courts were established in the upper country, Bates returned from the Cherokee coun-Bates returned from the Cherokee country, where he had taken refuge, and stole a horse. He was pursued and captured and securely lodged in Greenville jail. His captors recognized him as "the bloody" Bates. Motley heard of Bates being in Greenville jail whilst plowing in the field. He immediately left his plow, girded on a pair of horseman's pistols, and went to Greenville Court House. Col. Carter, a gentleman of high character and great popularity, was Sheriff of Greenville at that time. Motley demanded of him the keys of the jail, which the Colonel refused to give him. He told the story of Bates murdering his father, mother, brothers, and sisters, and presented a pistol at the Colonel's breast. The keys were given up, and Motley entered the init mother, brothers, and sisters, and presented a pistol at the Colonel's breast. The keys were given up, and Motlay entered the jail. He seized Bates by the throat and emptied the contents of it into his heart. Bates fell dead, and was taken from the jail and buried on the lot now belonging to Col. Hoke's estate adjoining the public square.

Motley returned home and lived in Greenville for many years. No one thought of prosecuting him for killing Bates. All applauded the act and honored Motley for doing it. About the same time a similar execution took place at Ninety-Six. Gen. Butler, of Revolutionary fame, went into the Court House and took a notorious tory assessin from the prisoner's, box after he had been acquitted of stealing a horse, and carried him out and hung him to a tree in the court yard. Judge Burke was presiding in Court, and when the wife of the prisoner appealed to him to save her husband, he replied, "Before God, my good woman, if I were to attempt to do so, they would hang me too.

B. F. Perrey.

Sans Souci, July 22, 1879.

"My Darling's Blind."

A lady entered a car on the Oakwood

A lady entered a car on the Oakwood road one day the past week leading a little girl perhaps four years old. The mother sat down and fitted the little one to the seat beside her. The child was nibbling at a bit of cake or sugar, now find then turning her face, full of childish love, up to her mother and murmuring some unintelligible words of affection.

Opposite to the mother and child sat another young lady, who often smelled a fresh rose which she held. The innocent little one before her attracted her attention, and natural kindliness of the sympathetic woman's heart prompted her to at once offer the fragrant flower to the budding lily opposite. So she leaned a bit forward and spoke:

"Baby want the posey?"

But the child seemed not to hear. Perhaps it was the moving car that prevented. Then she spoke a little louder, and held the flower forward temptingly—

"Baby may have the poaey."

The mother heard, for she looked toward the other lady and smiled—and oh! such a look of heartfelt gratitude of motherly love, yet saddened with such an expressive tingsof sorrow as is seldom seen. And still the lady of the rose pressed upon the little one the acceptance of the flower.

"Baby take the rose," holding it almost to the child's hands. And now it seemed ahe was heard, for the blue eyes turned fall upon her would-be patron, and then in a moment she strongly drew toward her mother's face. The lady with the flower showed her bewilderment in her look, while a pained expression flitted across the face of the mother, who loaned forward and whispered just a word—

"My darling is blind!"

"My darling is blind!" Then the whole sunless, darkened life of the fair little being—fair as the flower which had been offered to her—came up before the mind. All beauty shut out forever! For her no foliage strewn, flower-studded scene to follow the bleakness of winter. No looking with awe into the mysterious depths of the night sky, sparkling with glittering, twinkling star gems, for over those blue eyes the Oreator, in the mystery of His designs, had hung the impenetrable veil. No expectant gaze toward the mother's face for the gentlest smile that ever soothes a tant gaze toward the mother's face for the gentlest smile that ever soothes a childish trouble; only the blind passage of the little hand over and over those features, for one moment's sight of which that growing little one will often willingly ofter years of existence. For her the birds will sing; the lovliness of form and feather are not. For her while the babbling stream may make mysterious music, dimpled waves and winding reaches and verdant banks do not exist. How bitterly vivid all this as the lady

How bitterly vivid all this as the lady opened the little hand and shut within it the thornless stem of the rose, now bearng a tear in the petals.

And there were other swimming eyes

WANTED A SPECIMEN.—They were sitting in the office of Engineer DeHass yesterday afternoon, that is, a few of Burlington's most worthy officials, when a Hawkeye reporter intruded upon them in search of news. There was a positive declaration from each individual that he knew nothing. After a few moments' commendates remarks one of the gentleknew nothing. After a few moments' commonplace remarks, one of the gentlemen told a story. This reminded another official of a little incident in his experience as a school-teacher. He said: "I had a small microscope in the school, and I thought I would entertain the children with it one afternoon. I had heard that a louse was a wonderful thing under a maguifying glass, so just bofore school was dismissed at noon, I told the children that I wanted a big, fat louse, and that for the finest and fattest louse, and that for the finest and fattest one I would give fifteen cents. Well, dinner and went over to a corner to eat it. I had my lunch nicely laid out, and had just got started, when I noticed a had just got started, when I noticed a little six-year-old come in the doorway, and start toward me with his right hand extended and a triumphant expression lighting up his little countenance from ear to eye and back again. He marched right up to me, and as he got within reachin, distance, unclessed his hand, and said: "There, teacher; there, I got him," and with that he deposited a fine, fat gray-back alongside of the lunch. He was about to start off, when in came a little girl in the same manner, walked ing, and said: There, teacher; there, I get him, and with that he deposited a fine, fat gray-back alongside of the lunch. He was about to start off, when in came a little girl in the same manner, walked up with her head down, her thumb in her mouth, and laid down two. Well, they began to come in then right along, until about seventy-five were crawling around before me. I told the children to take them out, and save me two of the best of them. Then they gathered them up and took them away; but, gentlemen, I ate no more dinner. It took a wreek's salary to pay off the various fifteen cents I had promized, and when the debts were all paid, the study of animated nature in that direction was suspended for the present." Here the official paused and looked around for the "next," but no one offered to go one better, and seon the news-seeker quietly withdrew.—Burlington Hawkeye.

"Here there is the lunch. He was and their own business. The people will endorse nothing whatever, be it a president or a pill, that has not proved itself a genuine article. That the American people have so long acknowledged, by both word and patronage, the genuine-ness and value of Dr. Pierce's Family Remedies, is proof conclusive that their use fully justifies their discovere's claims for them. No other proprietary medical Discovery is a sovareign remedy for all scrofulous, blood, and skin diseases. It has pretty theroughly superseded the present." Here the official paused and looked around for the "next," but no one offered to go one better, and soon the news-seeker quietly withdrew.—Burlington Here of the best of the control of the best of the control of the best of the control of the were completely surprised and routed.

The prisoners were all released and returned to their hor in safety.

Many years after the close of the Settlement of a long dispute.—Physicians have at last come to the conclusion that the best medicine for teething children is Dr. Bull's Baby Syrup.

An Extraordinary Poonic.

At the meeting of the British Association at Sheffield on Aug. 23, the well-known African explorer, Commander Cameron, who was received with applause, apologized for not having his paper prepared, but he did not believe, in detailing the manners and customs of the people of Urua, in Central Africa, this would be a drawback. Urua was one of the largest native States in Africa, it was bounded on the east by Tanganyika, on the north by independent tibes in Manguema, on the west by Ulunda, and on the south by mountains south of the lake Bangueola. The great chief was Kasongo, and the race was perhaps the most civilized in Central Africa. The chief claimed Divine honors. On his death all his wives save one were slaughtered at the grave, and the one whose life was not taken was handed over to the chief's successor. The spirit of the deceased Prince was supposed to pass into the body of the successor. The center of the religion of the people was an idol, which was held in great reverence.

an idol, which was held in great reverence.

The idol was placed in the midst of a dense jungle, and it had for wife one of the sisters of the reigning sovereign. Under the principal chief were smaller chiefs, who colleted and paid over to the sovereign tribute. He had seen this tribute come in, and some of it must have come from distant parts of the country. There was a numerous class of wizards in the country who did a large trade in idols and charms. Many of the wizards were ventriloquists, and in this way the idols were made to give answers to the questions put to them. Caste was very clearly defined in the race. No one dare sit down in the presence of the chief without permission, which was very seldom granted. In one case where, in the traveler's presence, a native had neglected chiquette, severe punishment was shout to be idelicated but the traveler.

dom granted. In one case where, in the traveler's presence, a native had neglected ctiquette, severe punishment was about to be inflicted, but the traveler saved the effender.

Authority was maintained by mutilation. Hands, feet, ears, noses, were mutilated, and the natives did not seem to mind it much. One woman had cut off her own ears. This woman was one of Kasongo's wives; he had about 1,000 of them. She asked permission to mutilate herself, and did it at once. The bodyguard of the chief was composed to a great extent of mutilated people, whose affection for the chief seemed in no way decreased; indeed, it would appear that mutilation strengthened their regard for their chief. [A laugh.] The name of the idol was Kungwe a Banza, and profound reverence was shown to it. Firo was obtained by friction from a fire block, and in one case a chief used the shinbone of one of the other chiefs who had been conquered. The dress of the people was very simple, consisting of an apron. Members of the royal family wore three large skins, and junior members of the family wore aprons of green monkey skins.

The hair dressing of this people was curjous, varying more with districts these

The hair dressing of this people was curious, varying more with districts than with rank. In some cases it was worked up into four ring plaits crossing at the top of the head like a crown, and surrounded at the bottom by a band of cowries or other shells. Skewers were injuserted in the hair, one end of which could be used in tattooing. The people were not a hairy race, but they managed to grow their beards long, and platted them like a Chinaman's pigtali, usually putting at the end of each a lump of mud to weight it. Some of the beards reached to the waists. The women, not having beards to amuse themselves with, were tattooed extensively. Tattooing generally commenced at the age of seven, and might be completed about the age of twelve or fourteen, which was the age for marriage. Beautiful patterns were used, The hair dressing of this people was marriage. Beautiful patterns were used, and the tattooing was done in raised cuts. ometimes a husband, when he was dis pleased with his wife, cut off all these raised pieces, and the woman could not appear in public again; she was not received into society until she was retat-

was very curious. The festivities lasted several days. A ring was formed of the natives, two men with big drams being in the middle. The drams were played and the needle round danced. The in the middle. The drums were played and the people round danced. The bride was brought out, dressed in leathers and other finery, on the shoulders of the women. The bride threw shells and beads about, for which there was a scramble, as the possession of them was supposed to cenfer luck. Ultimately the husband came into the ring, and putting the bride under his arm, carried her off. [Laughter.] The means of communication was by drum signals. They had a call on the drum for everybody's name, and they could ask questions and convey intelligence over hundreds of miles and receive answers almost immediately. In war messages were constantly sent enormous distances to be sent the same of war messages were constantly sent enormous distances to bring up re-enforcements or to stop their coming. The mass of the people lived in huts on dry land, but there were one or two exceptions to this. He saw two lakes on which people were living in huts. In one or the were living in huts. In one case the people had covered over the long grass growing in the water with earth, and on that had built their huts; in the other the huts were built on piles. The language of the country belonged to the same broad family which stretched across the large belt of Africa traversed by him, and the grammar was on the same "inciples as the grammar of the Straed". ciples as the grammar of the Swaeni. [Cheers.]—London Times.

The Political Outlook.

The next presidential campaign will have one important feature—It will virtually express the people's verdict upon the questions at issue between the lead-ing political parties. For behind our government, behind our politi-cians, behind all the legislative machinery, rings, and petty partizan or-ganizations, is the real ruler and direcganizations, is the real ruler and direc-tor of our government—the sovereign people. Every official will be brought before the inquisition of the people's tri-bunal, and all proved unworthy will be ignominiously sent home to tend the farms and their own business. The people will

— On the bills of fire at the White Sulpher Springs Hotel, in Old Virginia, the following significant line appears: "Engagement rings can be had at the jewelry store."